Dancers at the Robert Levy Foundation's Believe event at the Hackney Empire

RESIDENTS of all ages celebrated justice and harmony during the annual London Week of Peace from 18 to 25 September.

Events in Hackney included Believe, the Robert Levy Foundation's youth talent showcase at the Hackney Empire, where the audience was treated to performances from 15 new acts. A minute's silence was held for murder victim Robert, who died six years ago.

His father, Ian Levy, also spoke at the second Community Safety Open Day of 2010, held at Stoke Newington Town Hall on 25 September. Around 150 people turned out to take part in activities and get information about safety initiatives in the borough.

PLANNING AHEAD

By Emma Britton

THE Council has given the go-ahead for a 'masterplan' for Hackney Wick that will help guide future development, while protecting the character and architecture of the area.

It was adopted following widespread public consultation, and proposes improvements to the Hackney Wick Overground station; a 'hub' around the station that could include restaurants, cafes and shops; better walking and cycling connections; and two new bridges to provide access to the Olympic Park.

The masterplan recognises the contribution of the creative and cultural industries in the area and supports their development and retention, while setting out development opportunities for local employment and enterprise.

Hackney Wick sits alongside the 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Park, with half of the neighbourhood inside the Park itself.

The masterplan sets out a vision to positively develop the neighbourhood over the next 15 years, and will be used to guide the assessment of planning applications.

Emma Britton

THE Council has chosen a partner to help it reopen Murray Grove Post Office in Hoxton.

Chandrakant Patel, who runs Murray's Chemist in Murray Grove, N1, is set to reopen the premises as a chemist this month, and offer postal services by the end of November.

The Council decided to try to reopen the post office after a public consultation last summer showed strong support among residents and local businesses.

It originally closed in June 2008, along with six other branches in Hackney, as part of the Post Office Network Change Programme.

Jules Pipe, Mayor of Hackney, said: "We're pleased to have found a partner who we believe will bring the right business skills and experience to run the post office successfully.

"Residents and local businesses, supported by their councillors, told us the closure has affected the way they go about daily tasks such as using postal services, paying rent and bills, and receiving benefits and pensions. Once the post office reopens, people will need to support it by using it regularly to ensure the Council can keep it open in the long-term."

The post office will offer a range of postal and banking services, as well as other services like foreign exchange. It will be funded by the Council for up to five years, with a review after two to assess levels of use and financial viability.

Residents and businesses will need to support it by using it regularly to ensure the Council can keep it open

100,000th Park site visitor

THE Olympic Park celebrated its 100,000th visitor during Open House weekend.

Hackney's Siobhan McDermott (left) became a dignitary for a day, joined by a host of former UK Olympians. She said: "It was spectacular to get up close to the venues. It was particularly special to stand at the end of the 100m straight in the Olympic Stadium with John Regis. I'm looking forward to coming back in 2012."

More than 4,000 people took bus tours around the site over 18 and 19 September to see the progress on the Olympic Stadium, aquatics centre, velodrome, media centres, Olympic village, handball and basketball arenas, infrastructure and parkland. It is the fourth year that the site has been open to the public.

Cllr Guy Nicholson,
Cabinet Member for
Regeneration and the 2012
Olympic and Paralympic

Games, said: "Hackney Wick has a unique character which is captured in this plan, and it will ensure that as investment flows into the neighbourhood, the development that follows recognises and enhances that character. It will also play a vital role in shaping and connecting a new neighbourhood for the Wick in the years ahead within the Olympic and Paralympic Park itself."

The masterplan was prepared by the Council with the London Thames Gateway Development Corporation and Design for London, and it complements the Hackney Wick Conservation Area Appraisal.

The two documents set out clear planning guidance for any proposed development. They pay close attention to the unique character of Hackney Wick as a result of its historic buildings, interesting streetscape and remaining industrial features.

Message from the Mayor

Real cost of ban on Council papers

THE Government this week announced plans to ban Council newspapers like Hackney Today, a move which could cost residents hundreds of thousands of pounds in higher taxes or lost services. The Government's plan will limit the Council communicating with all its residents to only four times a year, and there will be stricter rules about when we can do so, and what we can say.

Hackney Today has sometimes raised questions from residents, particularly about how much it costs the Council and therefore taxpayers to produce, and if scrapping it would save money. The truth of the matter, however, is that Hackney Today is the most cost effective way of communicating with local people. The Council is required by long-standing planning and other laws to publish as many as 1,500 public notices a year in a regular, local, printed newspaper. Without Hackney Today, the Council may have no other option than to hand over large sums of your money to other costlier publications to print our statutory planning and transport notices.

Figures show that this change will cost the taxpayers of this borough several hundred thousand pounds extra a year which will have to be found from Council Tax or savings in Council services. The Government will not be giving us money for this extra cost, instead they have warned councils to expect cuts in Government grant of a quarter over the coming years. Using Hackney Today also means that we don't have to spend thousands of pounds on leaflets every time we need to tell you about a service change. A good example is when a change is planned to a controlled parking zone at the request of residents. While door-to-door consultation will continue with the directly affected households, people from elsewhere across the borough will no longer automatically receive information on the proposal, or the decision.

Between the community news stories in Hackney Today, there are many notices about vital services from the Council, Hackney Homes on housing issues, the NHS about health services, the Learning Trust on education, and from the police and many other local organisations. Their nature and number mean that no one could expect a regular local newspaper to be interested in carrying them as news stories – but the information will be vital to numerous people and so they need to be published by someone.

The Government says that eventually they will change the law again to require that councils need only place information and statutory notices on the internet. However, in a borough like Hackney, this often means that the most vulnerable residents will be excluded as many people cannot easily get online. A recent survey showed that out of our 5,000 adult social care service users, including elderly and disabled people, only four per cent of them had access to the internet. Many of these people rely on the Council distributing information on community services for free, and direct to them through their door.

I am very concerned that the Government's proposals will mean we are forced into spending extra money at a time when frontline services need it most, and that you, our residents will have less access to information. You can respond to the Government's consultation on this issue by writing to: Rosalind Kendler, Communities & Local Government, Eland House, Bressenden Place, London, SW1E 5DU, or by visiting: www.communities.gov.uk/publications/localgovernment/publicitycodeconsult2010

Black History Month 2010

“ An opportunity to come together and celebrate how black culture has shaped and is still shaping our borough ”

By
Nicola Quinn

THIS year's Black History Month offers a creative art and media showcase from Hackney's present day Black African and Caribbean communities, as well as marking past achievements.

To coincide with the annual national celebration, the Council is offering a series of free events at Hackney Museum and libraries throughout October, and continuing until December. These include sessions featuring guest speakers, music and creative writing workshops, seminars and film screenings.

This year, the programme began with the launch of 'Reggae Rebels' at Hackney Museum, featuring the work of acclaimed photographer Dennis Morris. The exhibition in Reading Lane, E8, runs until 8 January 2011.

Cabinet Member for Community Services, Cllr
Jonathan McShane, said:

“Black History Month gives us an opportunity to come together and celebrate how black culture has shaped and is still shaping our borough.

“This year the Council is putting on some fantastic events, most of which are free, so come along, get involved and celebrate the diversity of our borough.”

Businesses can now express an interest in moving into the media centres after 2012 Games

DID YOU KNOW?

News in brief

Interest in media centres

THE Olympic Park Legacy Company is inviting expressions of interest from companies wanting to move into the International Broadcast and Main Press Centres that will house 20,000 journalists during the 2012 Games. Proposals must demonstrate how they would create employment opportunities, and connect to local communities such as Hackney Wick.

There has been early interest from a range of sectors including creative, retail, education, sports, culture and office use, and the current process will build on that. Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, said: "Our vision is to see creative, digital and media industries making the centres their home and working with the creative community already thriving in the area. We must ensure the employment legacy vital to Hackney and East London is achieved and we will continue to work closely with our partners to secure this for our residents."

Volunteer at the Games

APPLICATIONS have opened for residents to volunteer in the upcoming Olympic and Paralympic Games. The once-in-a-lifetime opportunity will see up to 70,000 helpers contribute in transport, language services, medical support, anti-doping policing and press operations among a number of fields.

The Council's 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games Unit is running a series of workshops on the Games Maker programme at Hackney Town Hall, on 8 October, 5-7pm; Hackney Community College, on 12 October, 5.30-7.30pm; and Volunteer Centre Hackney, on 14 October, 4.30-6.30pm. The closing date to register with London 2012 as a volunteer is 27 October. For more info call: 020 7241 4443; or visit: www.london2012.com/get-involved/volunteer

Apology – Anna Withers

IN the last issue of Hackney Today (HT 240, 20 Sept 2010), we published a picture of Anna Withers alongside a report on page 5 about the launch of a Council consultation on proposed changes to the way legal 'sex establishments' are licensed in the borough. (These regulations cover sex shops and venues such as a lap-dancing, pole dancing and erotic dancing clubs.)

The publication of a picture of Miss Withers in this context, was entirely inappropriate. She has no connection whatsoever with any venues classified as 'sex establishments'. (In fact, Miss Withers teaches ballet, dance and pole classes as an alternative method of fitness training.) Her photograph should not have been printed next to this story. We sincerely apologise to Miss Withers for this error and any distress or embarrassment caused.

Gaga for designs

By
Marcel Reinard

An 18-year-old Hackney clothes designer who snagged a London Fashion Week spot has now seen her designs picked up by US pop queen Lady Gaga.

Rhiannon Jones revealed her new outfits, which included 'printed leather influenced by her surroundings and London', at the Vauxhall Fashion Scout event on 20 September. Under her label Bolshie, Rhiannon became one of the youngest standalone designers to ever unveil a collection during the world famous week.

She said: "It was a really positive reaction and everyone loved it as being one of the most avant garde collections."

Singers Alexandra Burke and Sabrina Washington have been seen sporting her designs and now Lady Gaga has bagged some of her latest wares before they've even gone on sale. "She saw it in a new look book, called the shop and loved my stuff," added Rhiannon.

“It was a really positive reaction and everyone loved it as being one of the most avant garde collections”

Originally from Beverley, Yorkshire, Rhiannon left school at 15 – one of the reasons being because the school 'didn't like the way I dressed' – and came to London two years ago, enrolling at Hackney Community College. She also admitted that she didn't know how to use a sewing machine before starting a BTEC fashion and clothing course.

Since then, several national newspapers and TV stations have picked up on her talent and earlier this year she sold a collection to Soho boutique Machine-A.

TWENTY buildings and public spaces have been short listed for the prestigious Hackney Design Awards 2010.

For the first time, residents and visitors to the borough can vote for their favourite scheme. The winning entry will be announced as the 'People's Choice', alongside other categories at an awards ceremony in November. The judging panel – including architects and experts in the built environment – have selected the short list for their high quality, contemporary designs and contribution to the surrounding area.

The awards are run by the Council on a bi-annual basis. Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, said: "The awards are a celebration of the great design and architecture in Hackney. The Council continues to encourage excellence in all development, as we know that high quality buildings and public spaces make a real difference to our neighbourhoods."

Stand up and speak out for peace

Residents of all ages celebrate justice and harmony in Hackney during the annual London Week of Peace

By Michelle Flood & Felicity Jump

PEACE and justice were celebrated across the capital during London Week of Peace from 18 to 25 September.

Events in Hackney included Believe, the Robert Levy Foundation's youth talent showcase event at the Hackney Empire. Celebrity MCs – local comedian Lee 'Lil' Man' Vassell, and 2008 Olympic bronze medal winning hurdler, Natasha Danvers – delivered a vibrant kick-start to the Team Hackney-supported event on 18 September.

The audience was treated to more than 15 performances, ranging from rap and opera, to dance and poetry that tickled the spine. A striking fashion show from summer school students at Hackney Community College featured lavish designs inspired by Lady Gaga.

Following the opening acts, Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, took the stage.

He said: "Some of the best of Hackney's young talent will be performing today, not only to entertain us this afternoon, but to make a positive contribution to the community."

"We can celebrate the positive energy, dedication and hard work done here in memory of Robert Levy, and at the same time, encourage young people to stand up, speak out and break the silence around youth crime."

The talent show takes place annually in memory of 16-year-old Robert Levy, who was murdered six years ago near Hackney Town Hall. The aim is to celebrate achievement, promote positive activities for young people, and encourage them to do their bit to make their communities safe.

The Rev Rose Hudson held a minute's silence in memory of Robert and other young victims of knife and gun crime. The Robert Levy Foundation was set up by his parents, Ian and Patricia Levy.

Mr Levy was also present at the second Community Safety Open Day of 2010, held at Stoke Newington Town

“We can celebrate the positive energy, dedication and hard work done here in memory of Robert Levy”

The Believe event at Hackney Empire saw Hackney Community College summer school students show off their designs, as well as music, dance and poetry performances. Robert Levy Foundation founder, Ian Levy (below) gave a speech. He also spoke at a well attended community safety open day at Stoke Newington Town Hall

Hall on 25 September.

He said: "This event has been about getting together to do what we can to make the community a safer place. We need to give young people the space to get away from it all and achieve. I hope that after today we don't forget about it, but carry on with that feeling of peace for the rest of the year."

Around 150 people attended the event, organised by Team Hackney on behalf of Hackney Community Engagement Board (HCEB). Children were entertained by the police Safer Neighbourhoods Mascot 'PCSO Steve' who was on hand to give out balloons, stickers and other goodies, while residents had an opportunity to find out how the police, Council, Fire Brigade, and community groups work together to keep Hackney safe and clean.

Making time worth it

Matt McStravick got involved with Headway East London after suffering a brain injury. He has since become the organisation's TimeBank (Timber Wharf) co-ordinator

By
Marcel Reinard

IN the charity Headway East London's peaceful garden, beside the Kingsland Road stretch of Regent's Canal, Matt McStravick sits relaxed and content.

"It wasn't a 'road to Damascus' experience, I think it's fairly common for people who've almost died," he says.

Two years ago, the then music artist manager was found, with his bike, by the roadside bleeding from his ear; the victim of a mystery cycling accident.

"I've no memory of it, there was no CCTV footage, and no evidence," he says. The hospital later discovered he had suffered two brain haemorrhages.

"I had short-term memory loss for 12 days and was speaking this strange language, kind of like Esperanto. And I escaped from the Royal London and Homerton hospitals a few times; it was pretty crazy, once I even made it home," he recalls, admitting he was still ill at the time.

"After 12 days, I rapidly improved, but had to relearn a lot of language. I remember calling someone saying 'I'm having a problem with that thing on the side of my head'. They said 'what, ear?' I said, 'yeah, that's it, 'ear'," explains Matt.

A family member pointed him to Headway East London, a charity that provides support for people with brain injuries sustained in incidents such as strokes or major accidents, as well as offering help for their families and carers.

"It took me a few months to feel comfortable that my faculties were working again. I've still got a little short-term memory loss, but I just write more lists and wing it less," he says.

Fairly early on into his recovery, Matt felt a new career was needed: 'priorities shifted' due to a new sense of the temporality of life, and feeling 'you should spend it doing something you believe in'.

To test out the parameters of his brain, Matt began volunteering at Headway, getting to know others with brain injuries. He also began thinking about the national campaign TimeBank. Each member of which gives an hour of their time to volunteering and in return another member helps them out. So a resident could offer language tuition, or help the less mobile with their shopping; there's even a beekeeping class in Hackney. Such has been its success, Matt secured funding to extend the programme, creating a job for himself in the process.

He says: "We've signed up the Arcola theatre as a member. They needed some front-of-house help, taking tickets on the door, flyering on the way out. In return we receive theatre tickets: an hour for an hour. Other businesses may contribute an office space and in return they may get a handyman."

In particular, he spotted the potential benefits for people with brain injuries.

He says: "There are a lot of people at Headway with skills that aren't being used as much as they could. We have someone who has passed his accountancy exams – post-brain injury – and can give advice on book-keeping and tax returns. Rather than going straight back into paid employment, TimeBank is a way to test out abilities and improve confidence."

However, Matt is keen to add it's not a vocational programme, saying: "It's about passing each other in the street after having a small exchange, maybe a bike fix, and someone saying 'how's the bike?'

"It's those small points of contacts in the community that are sorely lacking and that TimeBank can boost."

With the current financial challenges, are such movements a viable alternative to monetary exchanges? Matt says: "I don't see it replacing our fiscal economy."

Adding: "But I do think some aspects of life aren't valued because they fall outside that economy. Aspects like befriending. These are vital to society and I do believe in society flourishing."

THE GREEN GENIE

All your recycling questions answered

Q: What happens to all the materials I put out to be recycled every week and what are they made into?

A: Materials that residents put in their Green Box for recycling are sent to various places around the UK where they are processed and reused. For example, batteries are taken to G&P Batteries, based in Staffordshire, who specialise in recycling and processing both lead and non-lead acid batteries. Cardboard and cartons are taken to Edwards Recycling in Essex, from where they are sent to UK-based mills for reprocessing into cardboard and board products. Clothing, shoes and textiles are sent to LM Barry in Canning Town, where they are sorted into two streams: one for charity, and the other to make felt, wadding and dusters. Paper is taken to Aylesford Newsprint in Kent, where it is turned into paper for newspapers across Europe. For further details visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/recycling-green-bin-faqs

Residents making the most of the activities on offer at the Give or Take area at Hackney Wick Festival

A bit of Give or Take

By
Sarah Menz

OVER 200 residents supported the Council's Give or Take event at Hackney Wick Festival.

People came along to donate or pick up a wide range of items including tennis rackets, picture frames, books, DVDs, bicycles and toys – diverting over a tonne of goods from

Hold your own Give or Take

If you feel inspired, why not try hosting your own event with friends?

Give or Take days are a great way of saving money by getting rid of items that you don't need, and taking ones you do. Simply invite friends and family to bring any items they don't need to your house, and everyone can swap it for something they want landfill in the process.

Also during the event, on 18 and 19 September, there were children's workshops to make environmental pledge wands. And one lucky seven-year-old rode away with a new bike, checked and fixed on site by the Bike Doctor – who was on hand to support anyone with their cycling woes.

Since the Give or Take events began in 2005, more than 20,000kg of goods have been put to good use by enthusiastic residents.

Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, said: "I'm delighted that so many Hackney residents regularly support our waste prevention events."

Love food? Save it from the bin

LUCKY residents have been tucking into an organic vegetable box, after taking part in a Council survey about food re-use.

The results showed that 29 per cent of those who took part, were committed to reducing the waste they created and cutting down the amount of food that ends up in landfill.

Simon Gray, was one of five winners who received a veg box provided by local sustainable development organisation Growing Communities.

He said: "It wasn't until I completed the survey that I began to understand just how much food our household does waste. The biggest waste seemed to be fruit, so we are now buying less, but more frequently, as opposed to buying larger amounts and risking it not being eaten or going bad."

The survey was part of the Council's participation in the nationwide 'Love Food Hate Waste' campaign, which included roadshows, workshops, local advertising and competitions.

The aim is to reduce food waste in North London by around 9,000 tonnes – the equivalent weight of nearly 1,140 double decker buses – by March 2011.

A DAY of crisp autumn fun is on offer for apple fans across the borough.

Now in its 10th year, Apple Day at Stoke Newington Farmers' Market is aimed at both adults and children, with fun sideshows and activities including apple bingo, splat the apple, traditional apple bobbing and storytelling.

There's also the opportunity to win a big breakfast in the bowling apples for bacon competition.

Hackney Harvest a local fruit tree group supported by the London Orchard Project, will be showing off its new map of fruit trees in Hackney.

Plus, alongside a display of over 18 apple varieties from producers at the market, there will also be a selection of apples to taste, grown locally by members of Hackney Harvest.

Rita Ozegebe, 71, has been getting some green-fingered help from Hackney Homes' team of gardeners

Helping out in the garden

OVER 100 older residents are getting a much-needed helping hand to look after their gardens this autumn. In the summer, Hackney Homes invited residents aged 65 and over – who might be having trouble carrying out larger gardening jobs – to apply for assistance.

Now Hackney Homes gardeners are out and about, helping those who applied with weeding, tidying overgrown bushes and generally leaving gardens neat and tidy.

Rita Ozegebe, 71, said: "Recently I have been struggling to look after my garden myself. The work they have done is so good. A big thank you to everyone who helped me, I'm so grateful."

All stories by
Marcel Reinard

WENTWORTH Nursery celebrated its 60th anniversary with children and VIPs, but the real star was a former staff member, who started at the nursery when it first opened in 1950.

Kit Crowley, who has lived nearby since 1948, chatted to guests about her 30 years at the Cassland Road nursery. She said: "It really has been a close-knit community, a happy place and really friendly team."

MP Meg Hillier was among the guests on 22 September, as were children's author Neil Griffiths, and performance artist Winston Nzinga, who also provided entertainment.

The nursery was also celebrating the opening of its refurbished childrens centre, which provides access to services such as health visitors, child psychologists, and literacy and numeracy classes for parents.

Carolyn Maples has been head teacher for 20 years. She said: "Wentworth has served its community well for 60 years, and we are all very proud of that. In 1950, only 10 pupils attended. Since then thousands of children have benefitted from the care and dedication of staff. It is a privilege for us to carry on the good work."

“It really has been a close-knit community, a happy place and really friendly team”

BSF planning permissions

PLANNING permission has been granted for two schools being rebuilt as part of the Council's Building Schools for the Future (BSF) programme.

Cardinal Pole Catholic School will move from a split site to a new three-storey building in Morning Lane, E9, while Our Lady's Convent High School in Stamford Hill will have a new L-shaped building with increased classroom and outdoor play space.

The two schools are part of the £170million BSF programme which is transforming education in the borough. Work is set to finish in September 2012.

Clapton Girls' Technology College and Stoke

Newington School have already been rebuilt, thanks to BSF funding, while work is well underway at Hackney Free & Parochial School, where this month, head prefects Hannah Oladugba and Ferdos Daqiq showed MP Meg Hillier (left) around a new £17million building. Hackney Free is due to be fully refurbished by December 2011.

News in brief

Free tickets to Rio screenings

PREPARE to be inspired: organisers at National Schools Film Week (NSFW) are bringing a roster of free screenings to Rio Cinema.

Now in its 15th year, the annual event offers free cinema tickets to

Bag some free tickets for Rio Cinema schoolchildren.

The selection links directly to elements of the curriculum, supported by an online library of resources.

This year's programme at the E8 cinema includes French flick 'Kirikou And The Wild Beasts'; 'The Rosa Parks Story'; 'Invictus'; and a series of short films by US production firm Sweet Blackberry.

The Rio said its line up complements Black History Month, while the shorts are designed for very young children and provide an insight into lesser known aspects of black history. The cinema also pointed to previous screenings, where it had worked with Hackney Free and Parochial School and the Petchey Academy on projects including creating their own films.

Ed Digby from NSFW said he hoped the week is seen as 'more than just a trip to the movies and has a genuine and substantial educational benefit'.

National Schools Film Week runs from 14-22 October. Book tickets online at: www.nsfw.org

Get a bang out of lessons

ALIEN life, the age of the universe and the links between maths and nature will be discussed in a school lesson led by Professor Brian Cox.

Launching a nationwide competition, the star of BBC's 'Wonders Of The Solar System' is hoping to spark interest in science. The prize will see him taking a one-off class, looking at some of the 'big questions' and discussing how people may be able to solve them in the future.

Brian, who was also keyboard player in 1990s band D:Ream, said: "Science, technology, engineering and maths always captured my imagination. They are the subjects that deal with the grandest and most exciting questions: When did the universe begin? What is life and how did it arise? Is mathematics the language of nature? How can we build a spacecraft to journey to other planets and moons and search for alien life? Answering questions like these is interesting, and of course a lot of fun."

Pupils can enter their school into the draw, which could see Brian taking over their lesson on 16 November. Deadline for entries is 24 October. For info visit:

Black Britannia

Until 22 Oct, Open The Gate, 33-35 Stoke Newington Rd, N16 8BJ

Dalston's striking new arts centre, Open the Gate, is exhibiting portrait shots taken by John Ferguson, one of Fleet Street's first black photographers.

Under the banner Black Britannia, the exhibition features 55 black Britons who have inspired the photojournalist and others surging in their profession.

Sir Trevor McDonald, Lenny Henry and Lewis Hamilton list as the famous faces, but those outside the usual realms appear just as key to the photographer; one being Kenyan-born guardsman Nicholas Tunge (pictured), who served in the Irish Guards. The exhibition's aim, said John, is to inspire by providing non-stereotypical role models, while showing the achievements of black individuals.

Rivington Place, EC2, until 27 November

TWO new photographic exhibitions currently fill Rivington Place's display space, courtesy of international photographic agency Autograph ABP. James Barnor's archive was produced during a career spanning more than 60 years. His portraits – from the late 1940s to the 1970s – represent societies in transition: Ghana moving towards independence and London becoming a cosmopolitan, multicultural metropolis. Exhibited in the UK for the first time, The Paris Albums present a selection of 200 portraits that Du Bois compiled for the volume, Types of American Negroes, Georgia, USA. They offer an extraordinary insight into the conditions of black culture at the end of the 19th century, only 35 years after the abolition of slavery. Tied into these exhibitions, Autograph ABP is launching its photography roadshow at Rivington Place on 23 October from 12–5pm. It is offering local people the opportunity to bring along and digitise their family albums and snapshots with a team of professionals, and become part of a living archive.

Over the next two years, ABP plans to take the photography road show to major English cities, so that people nationwide can make their contribution. Info: 020 7749 1240; www.rivingtonplace.org

Actor Jude Law and Peace One Day founder, Jeremy Gilley, meets young people from the Petchey Academy at the launch of Film Nation

Ready for action?

By
Marcel Reinard

Actor Jude Law stepped away from the limelight and into the natural light of eco-school Petchey Academy to launch a film project for young people.

The star is spearheading the Film Nation competition to encourage young people to make short films for the London 2012 Cultural Olympiad. The project is being run in conjunction with the Peace One Day campaign, which calls for a complete global truce on a single day each year.

The film project invites 14 to 25-year-olds to create inspiring stories, whether it's about their own experience of a truce with friends or family; how a past truce has inspired them; or what a global truce in 2012 would mean to them.

Peace One Day ambassador, Jude, said: "We're delighted to be working with the London 2012 Cultural Olympiad to issue a call to action for young people to change the world through creativity and the power of film.”

Winning films will be shown at the Peace One Day concert in 2011, on big public screens in the build-up to the 2012 Games, and at the events themselves.

Academy pupils have already been creating films for the competition. Head teacher, Olivia Cole, said: "The experience of making the film and meeting such talented film makers is an exciting reward for our students who live the Olympic and Paralympic values in school every day.”

Money matters

YOUNG people needing a hand with budgeting and other aspects of independent living can receive advice from a financial education charity. Charity MyBnk has teamed up with the Council and youth organisation Rathbone, to launch the Money Works programme to help young adults confront their financial worries, and support those trapped in debt or struggling with bills.

Participants will achieve two awards from the UK's largest exam board, AQA, for budgeting & debt management, and participating in a group work programme.

Twelve Hackney 16 to 20-year-olds not in education, employment or training are currently taking the course. MyBnk also runs a scheme at Yesoday Hatorah School for Girls where students can obtain loans and set up saving accounts and is planning a similar venture at Skinner's Company School later this year.

Many helping hands

By Ruth Garland

STALWART volunteers welcomed new helpers at the launch of a scheme at Homerton hospital.

Homerton Helpers aims to use the skills and experience of local people to enhance patients' stay in hospital.

Welcoming the new volunteers in their distinctive 'Green Gods and Goddesses' polo shirts, Nancy Hallett, Homerton Chief Executive, said: "Volunteering is not substituting for the day job: it gives to the hospital, it gives to the community, and it gives to the volunteers themselves."

Homerton has already pioneered new types of volunteering, such as its successful 'birth buddies' scheme which provides volunteer birth partners for women in labour.

Birth buddy, Elizabeth Simon, has supported 400 women through to delivery over three years. She said: "I enjoy it, and the women really value it."

Another volunteer, Rene Loake, 88, has worked in the hospital's League of Friends tea shop for 22 years. "I wouldn't have it any other way," she said. She still does months ago at Homerton was also at the launch. She said: "I had excellent support; it was fantastic to have the help of not just the volunteers, but the rest of the team as well."

The project is supported by Team Hackney.

Keeping in mind

MISCONCEPTIONS about mental illness was a key theme of this year's East London NHS Foundation Trust's annual general meeting.

As part of an anti-stigma campaign, keynote speaker Matt Fossey from charity Mind spoke to 100 attendees about how people can make negative judgements about mental health issues, even if they affect colleagues, acquaintances, neighbours or friends.

He gave the example of an experiment where adverts were placed on dating or flat sharing websites. Those that included the line 'I have a mental health problem' received half the number of responses of those without.

The event, which also gave a breakdown of the Trust's annual reports and accounts, took place at the Museum of London Docklands. Trust in Harmony Community Choir, made up of service users, staff and members of the public provided music at the 14 September event.

Celebrating heroes

VOLUNTARY and community heroes were celebrated at this year's Adiaha Antigha Community Achievement Awards, hosted by Hackney Council for Voluntary Service (HCVS).

Hackney Unites, a coalition of groups that aims to stem social exclusion, won the award for the voluntary and community sector organisation that has been the most enterprising in adapting to current challenges.

Step By Step and Hackney Family Backup were joint winners of the award for contributing to children and young people's well-being.

The contributing to faith communities award went to Talking Matters for promoting stress prevention in the borough's Orthodox Jewish groups; while the service to older people was picked up by North London Bikur Cholim.

City and Hackney Mind went home with the award for raising equality for its work in mental health.

Hackney Migrant Centre and Hackney Refugee Forum won a joint trophy for recognition for services for new communities.

The winners were announced at 'Your Future, Our Focus: Hackney Futures Fair' on 7 September, at Springfield House in Dalston. The awards were set up in memory of the late director of HCVS, Adiaha Antigha, who died in 2006.

Plastic fantastic

“The tortoise here and elephant unite, Transform'd to combs, the speckled and the white”

Clockwise from above: Daniel Spill's Ivory works c1880; portrait of Daniel Spill; an elephant and tortoise trademark was used by British Xylonite Co alongside a couplet from Alexander Pope's The Rape of the Lock: 'The tortoise here and elephant unite, Transform'd to combs, the speckled and the white.'; Portrait of Alexander Parkes; 1870 map extract showing the Parkesine Works in Wallis Road alongside George Spill's waterproof cloth factory

By Sally England,
Local Studies Librarian

HIDDEN away in Hackney Wick's Wallis Road is a group of industrial buildings dating from the mid-19th century, which played a significant role in the development of plastic.

The first man-made plastic was invented by Alexander Parkes in the 1850s. He called the product Parkesine, and made it from cellulose nitrate: wood, rags, or paper dissolved in nitric acid then mixed with a solvent to make a soft mass that kept its shape when hardened. Parkes envisaged his plastic being used instead of expensive ivory and tortoiseshell to make 'medallions, salvers, hollow ware, tubes, buttons, combs, knife handles... etc.'

The Parkesine Company was established in Wallis

Road in 1866, next door to the waterproof cloth factory of George Spill & Co. The cloth had previously been coated with rubber, but now Parkesine was to be used instead. However, Parkes didn't realise that his new invention required a long 'seasoning' process, without which, items would warp or shrink. He also used dirty cotton waste that left impurities in the finished product.

After two years the company folded, and Parkes lost interest in plastics, but his assistant was determined to continue. Daniel Spill, brother of George Spill, took over Parkes' factory and the Xylonite Company was registered in 1869.

This business also failed and was closed in 1874, but Spill didn't give up. He moved to nos.122 and 124 (now nos.180 and 182) Homerton High Street, where he opened his Ivory Works. The main product was knife handles, along with tubes for insulating electric cables, and small items of jewellery.

In 1876, Levi Parsons Merriam leased 122 Homerton High Street from Spill to make imitation coral jewellery from Xylonite, but demand was not high enough, so he turned instead to making combs in a shed in the garden of no.122.

Both Merriam and Spill were soon in financial difficulties and the two companies finally merged in 1879.

In 1883, the High Street premises were declared unsafe. Merriam used his own money to prop up the buildings as well as the company. Luckily, in 1885 came a deal with the Impermeable Collar and Cuff Company of Bower Road to supply cotton laminated with Xylonite.

But in June 1885, fire ripped through the acid shop. It was agreed that a new site was needed to manufacture what was a highly flammable product, plus more factory space was required. Xylonite was now made at Brantham in Suffolk, and sent back to Homerton to be moulded into specific products.

There was a serious fire at Homerton in August 1894, and the next year yet another, smaller, fire broke out. A farm at Hale End, Walthamstow, was bought in 1896, and in 1897 the Homerton works were sold.

Today Xylonite has all but disappeared, used only for making table tennis balls and guitar picks. The Homerton works, once the only plastic factory in the world, have gone too. The British Xylonite Company was eventually incorporated into BXL Plastics Ltd., which in turn became part of British Industrial Plastics, now BIP (Oldbury) Ltd, which kindly permitted the reproduction here of items held on deposit at Hackney Archives.

Free wheeling

By
Gracia Douglas

A VICTORIOUS Andy Russell has officially been named Hackney's slowest cyclist.

To mark EU Mobility Week, from 16 to 22 September, a race was held in London Fields that challenged residents to use their biking skills to negotiate a 10m track in the slowest time possible – without stopping or putting a foot on the ground.

In rainy conditions, Andy took the longest time – 1 min 47 secs – in the 26 September event, organised by charity Prostate UK. He won a selection of cycling related items donated by Bike Yard East and Rido Saddles.

Other events taking place in the borough over Mobility Week included the Well Street Common Bike Pit Stop that provided maintenance, safety and journey planning advice to around 80 visitors.

In addition, more than 200 people attended 'In Town Without The Car Day' on 22 September. The event in Goldsmith

Row, E2, saw a ban on motor vehicles for a day. A pedal powered sound system – with solar panel back-up – an outdoor café, and information on Hackney City Farm's bike loan scheme, were just some of the attractions on offer instead.

Riding a bicycle is one of the fastest ways to get around London. Over half of all car trips in the capital are under five miles; approximately a 30 minute cycle ride. Hackney has the highest proportion of cycle commuters in the UK.

Hackney's electric car charging point

Power point for the people

HACKNEY'S first publicly accessible electric vehicle (EV) charging point has been unveiled.

Based in the Bentley Road car park, Dalston, it will power EVs, which emit less pollution than conventional motor vehicles, thereby improving local air quality.

Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, Cllr Feryal Demirci, officially launched the Bentley Road point on 23 September. She said: "The launch of the borough's first public electric vehicle charging point will continue to help improve air quality and contribute to a reduction in carbon emissions."

Further charging points are set to be installed by the Council, with support from Transport for London and the Department of Transport. The Council is currently assessing sites where demand is expected to be highest.

Passing the baton

SCHOOLS across all 33 London boroughs will be joining in a walking relay this month.

As part of the Big Walk Once a Week (WoW) campaign, school children will pass a baton around the capital anti-clockwise, starting at Havering, until it reaches its final destination of Olympic host borough Greenwich.

Hackney's part of the relay is due to take place on 12 October. Schools will be walking from London Fields, along the Regent's Canal, to Mile End Park Stadium, where they will handover to young people from Tower Hamlets.

The 1948 Olympic Torch also will be accompanying pupils on the walk, with 2012 themed activities along the way.

The Big WoW is an annual celebration that encourages children to walk to school to help meet the recommended target of 60 minutes of exercise a day.

Are you and your van in the zone?

EXTRA time has been provided for larger van and minibus owners to get their vehicles in line with London's Low Emission Zone (LEZ).

Drivers of medium to larger vans and other specialist vehicles, now have until January 2012 to adapt them to meet a low pollution standard, in order to drive for free in the zone. Vehicles that don't comply currently pay £200 per day to enter the zone.

The aim of the scheme, said Transport for London, is to improve the capital's air quality by deterring the most polluting vehicles – older diesel engine lorries, buses and coaches – from driving into the zone. Cars and motorcycles are not affected.

Spreading across most London boroughs, the LEZ began in February 2008 and applies to vehicles over 3.5 tonnes, and buses and coaches over five tonnes with more than eight seats, plus the driver's seat.

Recipes straight from the ovens at Hoxton Apprentice

www.hoxtonapprentice.com

HACKNEY resident Waldo Almeida, 25, joined the Hoxton Apprentice in June. Currently studying for an NVQ Level 2 in hospitality and catering, his training complements his confidence and ability to learn and apply new skills.

Waldo said: "When I saw the chance to get new qualifications in hospitality and catering I knew I had to go for it."

With two children to provide for, Waldo's dream is to open his own catering company with an emphasis on the good customer service skills that he believes he has developed at Hoxton Apprentice. He said: "Mostly I have learnt how to be a professional team-worker. I love it when my customers feel like they have had the best time possible. Hopefully once my apprenticeship is finished I will go on to secure a permanent position in hospitality."

The Hoxton Apprentice is a social enterprise set up to train unemployed Hackney people – both in the kitchen and front of house.

Six-month apprenticeships prepare people for the workplace and give them the chance to gain an NVQ in Hospitality. Profits are returned to Training For Life, the charity which operates the restaurant, to deliver more training for unemployed people. If you would like to offer an apprentice a job, or become an apprentice yourself, call Jeanita Snowdon on: 020 7749 2800.

Which way now?

IF you live, work or regularly visit Stoke Newington, then the Council wants to hear your views about traffic and road safety.

A consultation has been launched on the impact of the one-way traffic system and the level of support for measures that could improve traffic or road safety conditions for people walking, cycling or driving in the area.

The consultation will help the Council come up with a range of potential new measures for the gyratory; the results will also be fed back to Transport for London (TfL), which is responsible for the gyratory system.

The consultation runs until 10 January 2011.

Complete an online survey at: www.hackney.gov.uk/consultation; or fill in a hard-copy version, set to be distributed with the 18 October edition of Hackney Today.

License to manage

THERE is still time for residents and businesses to have their say on the way licensed premises are managed in Hackney. The Council is holding a consultation about its revised Licensing Policy, which sets out guidelines for how licensed businesses can help the Council and police reduce anti-social behaviour, public disorder, noise and crime related to the borough's many pubs, restaurants, bars and clubs. The final drop-in sessions are scheduled on:

- 5 Oct, 4-8pm, Shoreditch Town Hall, Old Street, EC1
- 14 Oct, 2-8pm, Stoke Newington Library, 184 Stoke Newington Church Street, N16.

The consultation closes on 25 October. To complete an online survey visit:

The Mayor and Councillors

Councillors are elected by Hackney residents and serve for four years. The last borough elections were in May 2010.

Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee the Council and its services. They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues that may be of concern. Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see. Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – illustrated in the map opposite.

To check which councillor covers your area, or confirm surgery times, call: 020 8356 3373. More info: www.hackney.gov.uk/I-mayor-cabinet-councillors.htm

Keeping the standard up

Audrey Lee, Principal Commercial Standards Officer

AUDREY has been one of the borough's local champions, fighting for consumer rights, since 1994.

After growing up in Stamford Hill, and studying for a HND in Home Economics, a work experience placement in consumer rights sparked her interest.

One teacher training qualification later, and Audrey saw a job in Trading Standards and jumped at it.

She's now also got a Diploma in Consumer Affairs and enjoys keeping on top of developments so she can provide advice to residents and businesses.

This month it's all about online sales. She explains:

"Watch out for websites selling counterfeit goods, or sites which turn out to be fake and disappear with your hard-earned cash. With the increase in internet access via mobile phones, particularly among young people, more people need to know the risks.

"Simply by checking the website and payment page before you buy, you can avoid being ripped off and losing money."

Setting standards

By Rosalind
Stannard

RIDLEY Road Market in Dalston recently played host to the Council's Trading Standards team.

They gave away free expert advice and leaflets about how to buy safely online, and offered tips on ensuring you don't fall foul of tricksters.

Trading Standards work on behalf of residents to promote and enforce fair and safe trading in Hackney and protect the interests of consumers and businesses.

They take calls from residents, conduct investigations, check goods and services, and work with the police and other Council teams to tackle stolen goods and rogue trading.

It's not just advice about everyday products – guides are available for getting your money back from a cancelled flight;

Hackney's Trading Standards team can advise on how to avoid gambling with your money when you buy goods online what to consider when buying insurance; dealing with faulty workmanship or being overcharged; and how to safely buy a second hand car.

The team welcomes reports of rogue traders who bully, trick or rip off vulnerable people in their own homes.

The team also give free assistance to start up businesses – helping Hackney entrepreneurs set up sound companies with one-to-one advice on every aspect of consumer law.
